Weaving Hands

Victoria Berrios

These are the hands God uses to knit my life together.
Each new thread added is another person who enters,
Every twist a new experience,
A journey woven carefully,
My threads of existence being pulled into a tapestry.

These hands, they never stop,
And only the designer will get to see
The finished masterpiece.
But in the darkness,
My faith begins to increase.

A life in the tension of creation-
Pulled, tightened, unraveled-free.
Stretched, strengthened and stitched
Into a design more complex than I can see.

I know these hands are weaving with the red thread of grace.
Grace undoing all my knots,
Grace covering all my blind spots,
Grace woven into pain,
Grace the color of my savior's bloodstains.
Grace seeing my frailty spun into majesty.

Then I hear my Creator whisper...

"These hands, feminine they must be-
For the intricacy and deft required
To knit your being intimately."

Now into these hands I commit my trust
To a process yet unseen;
Into these hands I allow my heartstrings
To be pulled by eternity.
