Trouble Everywhere.

There's trouble in the dwelling,
There's trouble on the street;
There's trouble in the bosom,
Of every one we meet;
Morning, noon and midnight
There's trouble in the air;
And, oh! there's no denying
There's trouble everywhere.

There's trouble in the garden;
Beside the sweetest rose,
Beside the fairest lily,
The thorn of trouble grows;
There's trouble on the ocean;
There's trouble on the land;
And when the sun shines brightest
There's trouble close at hand.

From troubles that pursue us
We never can escape;
They're sure to overtake us,
In some peculiar shape;
To circle slowly round us,
Or seize us, unawares;
Trouble's sure to find us, for
There's trouble everywhere.

But after storms of trouble,
How blessed is the calm!
And after wounds of warfare,
How soothing is the balm!
And when from tribulations
Our spirits have released,
If but for one brief moment,
We know the joy of peace.

So trouble has its mission,
As through the world it goes,
A message unto mortals,
In every breeze that blows;
It moves the stagnant waters,
It stirs the pulse of health;
Gives courage to the hero;
To every laborer wealth.

Tis trouble that invites us
To brave and daring deeds;
Tis trouble that prepares us
To feel another's need;
Each heart must bear its burden
Of suffering and care;
For man is born to trouble,
And he finds it—everywhere.

Novel Reading.

Among the many evils surrounding the youth of our land, and amidst the outcry against drink and such things, there is one powerful factor in the demoralization of mankind that is sadly overlooked. I refer to novel reading. I have often thought of writing an article on it, yet waited, hoping some more capable writer would “speak out in meeting” on the subject. No one seeming to do so, I will venture a few thoughts.

In this age of reading and general education it is useless to shut our eyes to the fact that providing proper mental food for our children is almost as necessary as food for their physical needs. For if a child has thirst for reading he will read, and unless guided by wiser minds he (or she) will reach out for quantity without regard to quality. We do not condemn all fiction as bad, as some is useful and edifying, such as “Pilgrim’s Progress,” “Prince of the House of David,” etc. With such we have no quarrel, but believe they have done much good. The class we object to is that great torrent of cheap, trashy, polluting fiction that sells for a dime a piece in book form, or is strung out in installments in the daily and weekly papers.

In the United States the character of some novels and papers is dreadful to contemplate, and were it not for our stringently enforced laws on obscene literature, we in Canada would be flooded with the same. As it is, stray copies are smuggled in, and God alone knows the evil they have wrought. Of course the number who read such as the above represent only a small part of novel readers in general. The better class of novels simply insinuate what the others state in plainer terms.

Another source of fiction is the Sunday School papers, libraries and prizes. The prevailing idea is, “We must amuse while we instruct.” So they work in stories with heroes, heroines, plots, side characters, love scenes, and final marriage of the leading actors. The parties who select the books or publish the papers are governed by the demand in creating and distributing the supply. It is needless to add that this class of reading, while purely moral in tone (and thinly) veneered with religion, and professing to “paint a moral to adorn a tale,” is a stepping stone to novel reading. A thirst is created which grows on one and craves something stronger, and if given way to it don’t take long to reach the “Adventures of Texas Jack,” or “The Bloody Scout” series.

Though it will be humiliating to me, I will give a little of my experience, hoping it may lead some of our young friends to shun the rocks I have struck on. In my childhood, in England, I lived till my tenth year with my grandmother, a woman of very pious and holy life, and a great reader, in fact on her side we are a family of readers. In the kitchen stood a large cupboard full of books from floor to ceiling. The upper part was filled with religious works of various kinds, the lower with natural history, travels of Capt. Cook, Anson and others, historical works and nursery rhymes. We were poor, but the family trait had led my grandmother to realize that minds need food as well as bodies, and I doubt not those books represent much labor and self-denial on her part. At the age of ten we came to Canada and I was sent out to earn my living. I looked back with regret to the mental storehouse beyond the ocean.

I used to nearly starve for books, and got snubbed when I said so and was told to read my Bible. I always did read my Bible and my dear little Episcopal prayer book. But I had read with profit grandmother's books at home and I knew it was right to read anything good and useful. In desperation I read everything I could get hold of. I became an invertebrate borrower, and I sometimes got novels from friends and neighbors. It did not need many to make me a confirmed novel reader.

In short, from then till I was converted at fifteen, then in the brightness and youth, I remain your well-wisher for time and eternity.

DEAD TO SIN—ALIVE TO GOD.

“If we be dead with him in Christ was raised up from the dead and was made alive by the power of his resurrection, we shall also be made alive...” Rom. 6:11.

Salvation is always obtained upon conditions. To be a Christian requires to be dead to sin. It would be of unspeakable value to us to know if we are really dead unto sin.

First, they give false ideas of life. The characters depicted are seldom met with in real life.
ing is a common lot in the human family in one shape or another, either mentally or physically. When our suffering is sanctified unto us we are thereby elevated and made stronger in the Lord; but if not sanctified, that is, if the individual runs to any other source but unto God to soothe his sorrow, then sorrow is only aggravated. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. Then we should rejoice as much as we are made partakers of Christ's sufferings, so shall we be also of the consolation.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, Let us look continually "unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." Yes, look and meditate upon his sufferings. "What he endured, oh! who can tell?" His agony in the garden of Gethsemane where "his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground," and on the cross where he said, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" And all this that we do not know who the person was that expressed it, but it seems to me to be very pointed and worthy of space. Here is is: "Every son of man who would attain the true end of his being must go through deep suffering as of fire. It is the law of our humanity, as of Christ, that we must be made perfect through suffering; and he who has not discerned the divine sacredness of sorrow and the profound meaning which is concealed in pain has yet to learn what life is." THE BLESSED LIFE.

"For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." That is, dead to sin, to the world; the old man is crucified with the affections and lusts, and the new man, Christ Jesus, is put on, which gives a Christ-like spirit. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." Our bodies, then, are God's temples. How careful ought we then to live, with what religious fear! Our speech should be with grace, seasoned with salt. "For every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account at the day of judgment." Frequently we hear among professors foolish talking and jesting, which the apostle reproves, saying, "Let it not once be named among you, as becometh saints," which also has a tendency to lead us away from Him who has called us unto liberty. "Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty, only use not your liberty for an occasion to the flesh." It is the little foxes that spoil the vine, the little things which creep in that do the harm. "Satan, with malicious art, watches each unguarded heart."

We are told to watch and pray lest we enter into temptation. We might pray all our life time, but if we did not watch praying would do us no good. By not watching we lose our experience, and we wonder why we don't enjoy ourselves as we did in the beginning. The fact is, we have lost our first love and the soul has become lean. We may still have the profession but are backslidden in heart. Sad experience indeed, to get entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

But there is a better way, a more blessed and higher life, a life "hid with Christ in God." I would earnestly say, if there are any in a backslidden state, Renew your covenant with God, step out on the promise and go forward. The soldier that goes to battle goes prepared, he has his weapons of defence. So should we have on the whole armor—the helmet, sword and shield—that we may be able to face the enemy. There are giants in that land to fight, but we may say with Caleb and Joshua, "Let us go up and possess the land, for we are well able to take it."

"My brethren, I have found A land that doth abound With food as sweet as manna; The more I eat, I find, The more I am inclined To sing and shout hosanna." PETER STICKLEY.

FAITH WITHOUT WORKS IS DEAD.
James 2: 17, 18.

How would it appear for a Christian scientist to enter a hospital where the sick and injured were lying upon couches, and say to them, "You are not sick; you only think so; now think you are not sick, and you are not; arise, take up your bed and walk?" There are many persons who put faith where they should have works; and some have more works than they have faith. Some people live in filth till they make themselves sick, then pray to the good Lord to heal them. Had they taken proper care of themselves and attended to the physical means that God had given them they would not have been sick.

A house that is filled with sewer gas, making the inmates all sick, may have faith enough to take the inmates to a glory when they die, but the present need is plenty of work. There is, no doubt, great efficacy in faith and prayer, but neither of these will clean out drains or destroy the poisonous miasm. Faith without works is dead, being alone. There is plenty of good sense in this. The Lord taught his ancient people to pray, but he also taught them to take baths and keep clean, to wash off the filth of the flesh and to keep a good conscience, and rest from labor at suitable times.

Faith had its place, but it never became the universal panacea. Prayer had its place, but it did not take away filthiness. God would not allow His subjects to come into His presence without due cleanliness. None should enter the sanctuary unclean. I presume many who now go to the sanctuary would have been shut out of the Jewish synagogue for uncleanness. They would have been ordered to wash seven times before they could enter the house of prayer.

"Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." This may not have been meant literally, but its full meaning is all the more apparent when we reflect that none can be clean without the obedience of its literal interpretation. The Lord never gave countenance to filth. But few ever obey the gospel of cleanliness. They do not understand its commands. Neither do they appreciate the blessings arising from their obedience. They are too apt to suppose disease to be a visitation of divine Providence, an unavoidable interdiction to carry us out of the world to a higher sphere.

No, the lesson, if any, is to teach us the higher and cleaner plan in this life. The wages of sin is death. This is just as true literally as it is spiritually. The violation of the physical laws has its penalty. It may be death. It is a sin to be filthy, and a personal hygiene is incumbent. And so let us all attend likewise to the spiritual purification that we may have a good and clean conscience before men and God who is able to discern the very thoughts of men. A. S. Gish, M. D.

CANDOR.

As one who sees and realizes slightly, yet inconceivably, the importance of candor in all lines, my mind has reverted many times to this subject; and as candor, or honesty, means reciprocal harmony to the men who possess this invaluable characteristic, and a mutual attraction with their fellow-men and God, I determined to voice my sentiments on this subject, thinking some of the readers might advance their opinions and thoughts on the subject under consideration.

In considering any topic we must know the meaning involved in the word, or expression, and the exact limit of the term. In candor, we have a word particularly adaptable to spiritual as well as social and political affairs, and no man who possesses candor in any degree can have as the height of his ambition anything save Christ, and his sole object to live and glorify God. Now the word coming to us from the Latin means purity, honesty of purpose, white, free from spot or blemish, and it comes from Latin candoe, I am white, I shine, so that the original meaning and significance of the term has not changed, as candor means honesty, and honesty must prevail as long as the world stands or else worse than superstitions practices predominate.

Thus considering, it causes any rational being a tear of regret when he observes and comprehends the predicament the world is in at the present, and then pictures on his imagination the lovely, respectable and harmonious attitude that might be assumed if candor were in supremacy in each man's heart. Such is not the case but let us prompt each other through any attainable medium whatever to be candid.

Therefore, thus introducing, we must consider the power of candor in the social and business spheres of to-day. When we examine the business transactions between worldly men our curiosity is aroused when we see the difference in the results of business that has been executed by different individuals, and in advancing the cause for the diversity we must candidly assert candor.

We notice and follow the dealings of one man who possesses candor and who aims to obtain a livelihood by being honest and thus remembering the golden rule, to render unto others that which he should be pleased to receive. In his transactions he practises integrity and deals with ease, so to speak, which easiness results from him having perfect confidence in the uprightness of his fellow-man.
We now examine and scrutinize the transactions of a man whose fruits show to us that dishonesty predominates in his business affairs. We find noticeable features in this man that are not present with the honest man. Numerous designs, such as deception, misrepresentation, exaggeration, in fact one and the same thing—dishonesty. Thus we have the two men pictured, the one... and walk in the justness and accuracy of their convictions, and thus be honest and wise. Remembering that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and honesty, or candor, means wisdom, then can we say conscientiously, being honest men, we are the noblest work of God.

ABOUT TOBACCO AGAIN.

I am a reader of the Visitor, and have often noticed articles in it on tobacco, which always point out how harmful it is, both if smoked or chewed. And the harm is not only to the body, but to the soul. We read that no image shall enter the temple of heaven. Some say they use it for medicine, but, dear brethren and sisters, do not deceive, tobacco is no medicine for man. That excuse will not be accepted before the throne of God. We may deceive ourselves, and we may deceive others, but we cannot deceive God.

Now I will come to the point that is nearest to my heart. I have heard it stated that some of our brethren cultivate tobacco. If that is the case, I would ask those brethren, How do you feel when you are in your fields of tobacco? If the Savior were to pass by, do you think he would say, “Come and follow me?” I fear not, for you are not working for the Lord but for the enemy. No man can serve two masters, and no man can cultivate tobacco for sale and make a sincere confession of Christianty.

“Education to be of value must be a thorough preparation for life—that is, for individual life. The man or woman who is not well prepared to make the most and the best of life is not educated; no matter how readily he or she may read Greek and Latin.”
Israel in Their Promised Land.

Number Two.

Let us next look to the provision made for these people when they get to the barren hills of Judea.

"For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land." Ezek. 36: 24.

"And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced and are inhabited. Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it." Ezek. 36: 35, 36.

Strangely enough, viewing from a human standpoint, are the tastes of these people changing, and we find they who were the bankers and merchants of the world are now given to tilling the soil and building of houses. Colonies are formed and the land is sold to them on terms so liberal that in a few years they will be able to own it. The shares of a building society formed for the purpose of erecting 3500 houses on the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem and Hebron were all taken when issued. This would give accommodation to 24,000 persons in this one society alone. These houses are sold on terms so that on the payment of a small yearly rental they may be privileged to own them in a few years.

One colony near Samaria, known as the "Remembrance of Jacob," has 500,000 vines, 3,000 olive and 3,000 almond trees, while another has 2,000,000 vines. Others have vast orchards of figs, lemons, apples, olives, pomegranates and bananas, and large fields of sugar cane and cotton. Indigo and various fruits and vegetables are cultivated with great success.

A large flour mill has proven of much benefit and a great success, and other industries are following. A steam saw mill at Jaffa, the seaport town of Jerusalem, has been established with success.

Let us compare prophecy with the transpiring events of to-day.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hananel unto the gate of the corner. And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more forever." Jer. 31: 38–40.

We find that the Jerusalem of to-day is covering this very area. Towards Goath there are going up 400 houses, in other places 250, near the brook Kidron 40, and great hospices, hotels, churches, stores, etc. And why should Jerusalem rebuild more than Nineveh, Babylon, Thebes or Memphis?

But some might ask, "How is all this work in a land for centuries so barren and with so little rainfall, coming to blossom again?" Let us hear what the Lord says: "Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people. Yes, the Lord will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and vine, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen." Joel 2: 18, 19.

"Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the faws shall overflow with wine and oil." Joel 2: 23, 24.

"Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain; so the Lord shall make bright clouds, and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field." Zech. 10: 1.

And within the last two years they have a rainfall nearly equal to that of England. Jerusalem has been hitherto dependent for her water supply on underground cisterns, which in the long drought becomes very bad, but the government is about to introduce water from a spring about nine miles distant.

There are two weekly newspapers published in Jerusalem, which have a circulation all over Palestine and Syria. Those who are coming back speak a jargon of different languages. But they are forming schools for the cultivation of the ancient Hebrew of which the most of them have some knowledge, and it is their ancient tongue which forms the linguistic bond of Israel.

And another sign that must thrill the heart of every Jew is a Hebrew coin. The colony which has obtained the right of coinage is the Zichron Jacob, named in honor of the father of Baron Edmund de Rothschild. It is a brass coin and passes current among the Arabs. Probably the name of Rothschild gives it its prestige.

Is it a significant fact that a railroad has been constructed from Jaffa to Jerusalem? Then there are proposed extensions to other cities and across to Damascus, Babylon, Tadmor and down the valley of the Euphrates. Let us look at the words of Nahum the prophet, 2: 4, "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways; they shall..."
American locomotives, from the Baldwin locomotive works of Philadelphia, now daily thread their way through valleys and narrow gorges, making hills that once listened to the bleating of Judean flocks resound to the shrill whistle of the engine, which excites the fear and admiration of the natives.

Let us keep our eye on Russia even in this land of the Turk. She is spending a quarter of a million in the erection of a vast building to the northwest of Jerusalem, on a table land, believed to be for military purposes. They have blasphemously erected also on the summit of the Mt. of Olives, on the very spot from which it is supposed our Savior ascended into heaven, a tower of magnificent architectural appearance, from whose top the Dead and Mediterranean seas can be seen. It is 180 feet high, 24 feet at the base and 21 feet at the top; it has within a great bell, or tocsin, weighing 20 tons, cast in Russia. Above the monster bell are 7 smaller ones. Above the latter is an electric chamber with wires running to all the monasteries and convents in the Holy Land, and on the summit is an electric light. It is said when this bell is tolled by the Rothschilds, the only shrine of Palestine belonging to the Hebrews. A rounded white dome is built over the sepulcher, and once a week the Jews go there to bewail the desolation of Zion and to burn incense.

The following is a petition drawn up at a meeting of Jews, at Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, London, May 23, 1891, (the largest assembly ever held in England) for presentation to Lord Rothschild:

"Is there no cure for the wound of the daughter of Zion? In the hour of our tribulation our eyes and hearts turn to the land where our fathers dwelt, each under his vine and under his fig tree. Many of those who are outcasts from the northern country, yearn to return to the Holy Land. They love the very stones and favor the dust thereof; and they would deem themselves blessed indeed if they were permitted to till the sacred soil." If at this moment the ground is barren in parts, and refuses to yield its produce, we know it is the hand of man that has wrought the evil. The hand of man shall remedy it. We beseech the government of this land to help our afflicted and downtrodden brethren—to help them, not with the sword, but with the friendly service it is in their power to render. Let them open their mouth in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction. Let them be their advocate with the government of Russia, so that it may make their departure easy, and with the government of Turkey that it may enable them to dwell in safety, and acquire possession, at a just price, of parcels of land for cultivation and for the rearing of cattle in Palestine and the districts surrounding it."

At the Jews' wailing place outside the walls of Jerusalem they chant the following prayer:

"We pray thee have mercy on Zion; O, Lord, gather the children of Israel together. May the kingdom soon return to Zion. Comfort those who mourn over Jerusalem, and may the Branch of Jesse spring up in it, and peace and joy abide with Zion."

They expect soon to have the evening sacrifice restored, and are daily looking for their Messiah.

"When three thousand men at Pentecost cried, 'What must we do to be saved?' we rejoiced; St. Peter did not say, 'Stand up and bow your heads while I pray, and then sign this card.' If he had we should never have heard of the New Testament church; for it took New Testament religion to make the early church."

Mr. Joseph writes in the Messiah's Witness, a paper published in Jerusalem, that on February 24 it was cold and stormy, sleet, snow and rain pouring down, but, although the mission room was a mile from his home, he felt he must go, although he did not expect anyone there. But to his surprise the room was full of men and women and the little ones, who by the bright fire thought it a paradise and made exclamation of gen eden, meaning paradise.

Rachel's tomb has been purchased by the Rothschilds, the only shrine of Palestine belonging to the Hebrews. A rounded white dome is built over the sepulcher, and once a week the Jews go there to bewail the desolation of Zion and to burn incense.

The very destitution of this people makes them more easily approached by the kindness of the Gospel.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The General Conference of the church of the Brethren in Christ convened at the Franklin meeting-house, Whiteside county, Ill., at 10 a. m., May 17, and after devotional exercises was promptly organized by electing Eld. M. H. Oberholtzer, of Culbertson, Franklin county, Pa., moderator.

After the reading of scripture and some appropriate remarks by the moderator, the Conference entered upon the work for which it had convened. The church was pretty well represented from the different localities of the brotherhood, though not so large as some former Conferences.

The arrangements for Conference were very good. The brethren of Illinois have certainly done themselves credit for the manner in which they had arranged for the comfort and convenience of those attending Conference.

The spirit of the Conference was good; the aim seemed to be to arrive at safe and wise conclusions.

Among some of the more important matters that came before Conference perhaps nothing seemed so prominent as the mission work. Especially did it receive favorable recognition in Chicago, and Bro. A. L. Myers, of Freeport, Illinois, was placed in charge of the work there, with the understanding that he is to move to Chicago, rent a hall and open a mission at some suitable place in the city. We are glad that the matter has obtained a foothold there and we trust that it will be a success, in fact, we are satisfied that it will if it is backed by the prayers and financial aid of the church. This mission will be a nucleus around which we trust will centre the working Christian element who desire to see the work in Chicago prosper.

Already there are several families belonging to the church located in the city, and if more should move in, and there no doubt will be when occasion offers, they will have some place of worship where they can meet to worship that will always be ready, besides, too, when ministers have occasion to pass through the city they can make it a point to stop over night, or possibly several days, and if so they can devote their time in assisting those in charge of the work. But we are glad to note that the work there has been placed under the charge of Bro. Myers. We think this is as it should be, because he will be on the ground all the time and in connection with those that reside there he will be better able to judge of the nature and wants of the work than those who only occasionally visit there.

There is one thing that should not be overlooked by those visiting, that Chicago is a large city and no doubt a costly place to live, and we would say when you go to the city to help, that the mission and mission workers will need financial as well as religious aid.

But we are digressing. What we wanted to do was to note some of the important work of the Conference. The evangelist question which was laid over from last year's Conference was disposed of at this Conference, and it was decided to place evangelists in the field.

Another especial action of Conference was to, urge upon the church within each state, where the membership is large enough, to organize into a mission district for home mission work, and we earnestly hope that such organizations will be effected in each state where it is possible, and that the work will be followed up by an aggressive effort against sin of every class and kind. Through this instrumentality we trust many souls will be reached that are yet in sin and error.

The Carland mission received favorable action. Bro. George Kiteley, of Yale, Michigan, is to fill the appointments for preaching there, under the supervision of Eld. Samuel Baker, of Gormley, Ontario.

Bro. Jacob Martin, of Elizabethtown, Pa., was placed in the mission field for the ensuing year, to be supplied with an assistant as occasion may require.

It was also ordered that a new edition of our church hymn book be published as soon as possible, and the work was placed in the hands of Bros. S. E. Graybill, of Martinsville, Pa., and Abraham Hess, of New Danville, Pa.

The place selected for the Conference of 1894, is Dickinson county, Kans. The post-office and railroad station is Abilene, Kans.

The Conference closed on Friday afternoon, May 20. One feature of this Conference was perhaps new and yet it may be the beginning of something very profitable as well as instructive, and that was a ministerial meeting. We trust God will bless it to the good of the church.

After Conference there was a love-feast held in the church. Many of those from a distance remained to partake of the feast. The services closed on Sabbath evening. The Sunday-school met at 8 p.m. Sunday afternoon, with a large attendance, and was addressed by Bros. W. O. Baker, Geo. Detwiler and S. Zook. The subject was Temperance and to those who remained to hear it is said to have been a very profitable occasion. Altogether the time that was spent there, we think, will long be remembered by all, and we trust will have its effect for good to all who attended. In conclusion, we would say, may the Lord bless those dear, kind brethren of Illinois who labored so hard to make the work of Conference held in their midst a success worthy of the name.

REMINISCENCES.

The place where the love-feast for Ashland county, Ohio, will be held this year is noted for the many religious services that were held there when the church was in its infancy in Ohio. During the life time of Bro. Peter Brubaker his home was noted for hospitality and for religious services. From our first acquaintance in Ohio, more than forty years ago, and up to the time of his death there was perhaps no place in Ashland county that there were so many love-feasts and other appointments of a religious nature, among our people, and just shortly before his death he donated a lot of ground for a cemetery and meeting-house. It is here that the well known Chestnut Grove meeting-house is erected.

It is here, too, that the church prospered. His children nearly all, if not entirely all, as they became old enough to comprehend the duty of worship, sought and found Christ, and were baptized and united with the church. Brother and sister Brubaker were unassuming, true-hearted Christians. There was no bigotry about them. They did nothing for show or to be seen of men, but they were very much in earnest about their religious work, as the writer can very well testify. Their children, too, seemed to walk in their footsteps, and those who had the pleasure, as the writer often had, to visit at their houses, partake of their hospitality and mingle in the praise of God with them, very well remember of the enjoyment that religious worship brings with it.

Then, too, in more recent years we are glad to note that the grandchildren are coming into the fold one by one. Truly that must have been good seed sown and it must have reached deep down into the hearts of the grandchildren, as we trust is the case with the brother where the love-feast is to be held. Although he withstood long the prayers of his grandparents and of his faithful father, long since gone to his final home, yet it can be said truly that the effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much, and finally he yielded and gave his heart unto the Lord, and is giving evidence that he, too, wants to follow in the footsteps of his father as well as his grandfather, and opens his house and his barn to hold religious services, inviting his neighbors and the church to hold a feast unto the Lord.

But before we dismiss this subject we cannot pass by referring to his devoted and faithful wife, who many years ago gave her heart to the Lord and has waited and prayed that the Lord might lead her husband into this plain and narrow way until finally her prayer was answered in the conversion of her husband, and now they can go hand in hand in the service of the Lord. May their last days be their best days and may they devote their energies and their means to the service of the Lord.

There are many others residing in Ashland and Richland counties, O., that we would like to refer to in this connection, but time would fail us and we must content ourselves with this passing sketch. May it be to the glory of God is our earnest prayer.

The secret of a successful ministry is found in a passion for souls. David Brainard strikes the keynote. He said: “I cared not where or how I lived, or what hardships I went through, so that I could win souls for Christ. While I was asleep I dreamed of these things, and when I awoke the first thing I thought of was this great work. All my desire was for their conversion, and all my hope was in God.” All the desire centered on saving souls, and all hope for that end centered in God; this will make the ministry successful in the only true success.—Christian Advocate.

EXPERIENCE.

Dear readers of the Visitor.—I have often felt that I should give some of my experience in the Visitor, and I will now take the opportunity. I enjoy the reading of the experiences of others and it gives me encouragement to write.

I was about seventeen years old when I first started to serve the Lord. One Sunday afternoon on my way home from an application meeting, I felt convicted. I thought I wanted to be a Christian and follow the Lord Jesus. I felt quite dissatisfied with my condition, and the more I thought over it the more I felt condemned, until I became willing to obey the Lord. As soon as I gave myself up I received a blessing and then I had it good. My wish and desire was that I might be a true Christian, a true follower of the Lord Jesus. I loved to go to meeting and to be where the Lord's people met.

When I was eighteen years old I was baptised. But while I wanted to follow my Savior I also had my trials and temptations and my gloomy seasons. Sometimes my mind was taken up too much with the pleasures of the world and I was led to feel that I did not live as close to God as I ought, but then the Lord would help me when I would come to him. Sometimes I felt that I was not as obedient to my parents as I should have been, but when I went to them and asked them to forgive me oh, how happy it would make me feel when I would hear the word of forgiveness! So, too, when I was not so obedient to my heavenly Parent, and would come humbly and ask pardon how ready the Lord was to forgive. I wish that I might let my light shine at home and abroad that others might see by my walk and conversation that I am seeking an inheritance with God.

I can thank the Lord that he has done so much for me, that he so loved the world that he has given his only begotten Son that whoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life.

Brethren and sisters pray for me that I may hold out faithful.

A LETTER FROM THE FAR WEST.

Dear editor.—If you will give me a little space in the columns of the Visitor, I will try by the help of God to write a few of my thoughts for the encouragement of others. It is the first time I have written for the Visitor—I am almost ashamed to say it, and yet I should not be when I consider how many of my brethren and sisters have not been heard from, among the number many ministers, too, whom we look up to for instruction.

I am a poor scholar, but there is one thing I do know, and that is that the Lord, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins and set my soul free, and my Jesus keeps me safe even here in Oregon, among these beautiful evergreen mountains. And although we have no earthly shepherd here yet Jesus is my Shepherd, and I can truly say he leadeth me. He is the Captain of our salvation. Bless the Lord.

Not long ago I read in the Visitor of some of our fathers who have recently passed away. I trust it can be truly said of them that they rest from their labors. May their works follow them. Soon it will be said of me, too, like it is said of the wind, that it passeth away and cometh not again.

I will close by asking heaven's choicest blessing to rest upon you and the church. Remember me when you bow around the altar of prayer. From your brother in Christ.

HOW IS CHRIST THE SON OF DAVID?

The Jews would not believe that Jesus was the Christ, because they knew of his birth and of his parentage, and therefore rejected him, for the reason that they thought when Christ would appear on earth no one would know how he came or whence he came. John 7: 27. Holding such a belief as this, it was no wonder they could not answer the question, how David himself could call him Lord, when he was his son. But we must remember that at the time David wrote the passage, "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool,” Christ had not been born in the flesh. At that time Christ was not yet David’s son, except in prospect.

Matthew opens his gospel thus: “The book of the genealogy of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.” This is the same as saying Christ was David’s son and David was Abraham’s son, although there were a good many generations between them.

Then, beginning with Abraham, Matthew follows the generations down to Joseph the reputed father of Jesus; hence all the descendants of David were called his sons and daughters. Even the angel that appeared to Joseph in a dream, called him a son of David; and, though we have no account of Mary’s genealogy, it may be taken for granted that she also was a descendant of David, and therefore, according to the flesh, Christ could appropriately be called the Son of David, but in spirit and power and immortality he was the Son of God.

We now return to the passage, “The Lord said unto my Lord. That is, one Lord spoke to the other Lord. A the Lord and a my Lord. Now, how shall we further distinguish them? I take it that the first named means God the Father, and the other, God the Son. In other words, The Father said to the Son, “Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool.”

But why should David claim a closer relationship with the Son than with the Father? It must be because, according to the first chapter of John, third verse, we were all created by him; and not only created, but redeemed from our fallen state.

Again, where is God’s “right hand”? Ans. In the heavens above, or it may be any place that he assigns to his faithful subjects, whether North, East, South or West of his great throne. So long as we are in unison with the great Jehovah, I imagine we are at his right hand.

And, again, What are we to understand by Christ’s foes being made his footstool? Well, we learn that heaven is God’s throne, and the earth his footstool. And from the above quotation from Psalm 110: 1, in connection with what we can glean from 1 Cor. 15: 24-28, we are led to believe that God will have Christ the Son abiding at his right hand until the devil is chained and cast into the bottomless pit, and consequently all the wicked laid low as the ground, even to his footstool.

And then Christ is to come and establish his kingdom at Jerusalem for a thousand years, during which time he will rule all the nations of the earth, after which the devil shall be loosed for a little season, and a new order of things begin, of which we know but little at present. This last paragraph is in accordance with the views of many Bible students, but may be widely misleading.

THE QUAIN SHORT Picture.

He was a high church clergyman, was converted under his own sermon, the news spread in all directions that the parson was converted, and that by his own sermon in his own pulpit. The church would not hold the crowds who came in the evening. He says, “I cannot exactly remember what I preached about on that occasion, but one thing I said was that if I had died last week I should have been lost forever.

“I felt it was true, so clear and vivid was the conviction through which I have passed, and so distinct was the light into which the Lord had brought me, that I knew, I was sure, that He had brought me up out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and put a new song in my mouth. He had quickened me who was before “dead in trespasses and sin.”

I now come to the quaint old picture and the inferences that the subject of this paper drew from it, which I will give in his own words.

“As I was sitting by the fire one wet-afternoon, my eyes fell on a little colored picture on the mantel-piece, which had been my companion in my journeys.

“It was a quaint medieval illustration of Moses lifting up the serpent in the wilderness. As I looked at the engraving before me I began to suspect for the first time that there was a design in the arrangement of the figure, and that it was really intended to convey some particular teaching. I took it in my hand and studied it, when I observed that the cross, or pole, on which the serpent was elevated stood in the centre, dividing two sets of characters; and that there were serpents on the one side and none on the other.

Behind the figure of Moses is a man standing with his arms crossed on his breast, looking on the brazen serpent. He evidently obtained life and healing by a look. On the other side I observed that there were four kinds of persons represented, who were not doing as this healed one did to obtain deliverance.

“First, there is one who is kneeling before the cross; but he is looking towards Moses, not at the serpent, and apparently confessing to him as if he were a priest.

“Next behind him is one lying on his back, as if he were perfectly safe, though he is in the midst of danger, for a serpent may be seen at his ear, possibly whispering, Peace, peace when there is no peace.

“Still further back from the cross there is a man with a sad face, doing a work of mercy, binding up the wounds of a fellow sufferer, and little suspecting that he himself is involved in the same danger.
"Behind them all, on the back ground, is a valiant man who is doing battle with the serpents, which may be seen rising against him in unabating persistency.

"I observed that none of these men were looking at the brazen serpent as they were commanded to do. I cannot describe how excited and interested I became, for I saw in this illustration a picture of my own life. Here was the way of salvation clearly set forth, and four ways which were not the way of salvation, all of which I had tried and found unavailing. This was the silent but speaking testimony of some unknown denizen of a cloister who lived in the beginning of the fifteenth century, in the days of ignorance and superstition. But notwithstanding this darkness, he was brought out into the marvelous record of his experience.

"Like him, I had also fought with the serpents; for I began in my own strength to combat with sin and strove by my own resolutions to overcome. From this I went to do good works of mercy, in the main to look at the crucified One. Then I found pardon and peace. Ever since it has been my joy and privilege (like Moses pointing to the serpent) to cry, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.' I have determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified, that is, to tell only of the person and office of Jesus Christ our Lord. Reader, are you born again?"—Selected.

FOOLISH CUSTOMS AT WEDDINGS AND FUNERALS

Someone has said that "society is a terrible engine of oppression." Doubtless we are too much influenced by the example of others. We build better houses than we can afford because our neighbors build them. We wear finer clothes than we need be because our friends wear them.

"The eyes of other people Are the eyes that ruin us."

We do not need to point to the thousands of cases every year of forgery and dishonest dealing to show that men and women live beyond their means. We see it early in the young man who takes a young woman to a party, hiring a carriage in which to bring her, when the street-cars are good enough for both, and quite all he can furnish her after they are married; buying a bunch of expensive roses for her because society seems to demand it, when in the store or office or bank where he works he earns very little more than enough to pay his own board. Fortunately a young woman sometimes has the good sense to think of a man's pocketbook, and is unwilling that any person should spend a large amount for her pleasure. A selfish girl makes a selfish woman, and where love has not made eyes too blind, it can be seen by the young escort. She dresses better than her parents can afford—the mother often making too great sacrifices for the daughter, and the father spending other people's money on her. We could learn from the English a more simple and wiser fashion of dressing young girls.

Especially are we foolish in our wedding expenditures. Wedding presents have come to be a burden, and, to a great extent, simply a matter of pride. Said a lady to me recently: "We do not know very intimately the parties to be married, but our presents will be exhibited among the others, and we should be ashamed not to have them as elegant as those of our neighbors." And this same lady could ill afford to buy things for her own household, saying nothing of a thousand ways in which she could better have spent the money. It is useless to reason that people need not give presents. As long as we have such a needless fashion they will feel obliged to give, just as they do at Christmas, when half the time they have little heart or pleasure in it. The recipients always know that in the years to come, they also will be obliged to give presents in return; spoons, sugar-bowls, butter-dishes, that often are in duplicates, and of no use to the possessor. This society-fashion for the people who are in ordinary circumstances is indeed a social oppression. It is pleasant to give and pleasant to receive; but not when you are certain that many are unable to give, and do so only because it is the fashion.

If society would use the money expended for wedding presents in proper tenement houses, or free baths for the poor, or public parks, or to send boys and girls to college, the results in happiness would be increased a thousandfold. Of course, it is argued that the making of these costly things gives work to the poor. A five-thousand-dollar clock may give work to the poor, but it is scarcely an open question whether five thousand dollars used in the making of nails or plows would not give much more work, and in a much more useful way. A five-thousand-dollar dress might help somebody, but the results of the five thousand in sending two boys or girls through college, with their consequent usefulness, or the building of three houses for hard-working poor people, are above comparison with the dress. How could the fashion of promiscuous wedding gifts be changed? Just as the fashion about flowers at funerals has been changed. Heretofore, people who cared comparatively little about a person felt obliged at his or her death, in many instances, to send a five-dollar wreath, because they had met in "good society." A single line in the press, "Friends are requested not to send flowers," has stopped all this willing or unwilling giving. When shall we see at the bottom of wedding invitations, "Friends are requested not to send gifts?" The outside world would breathe a sigh of relief, while the father would not be debarred from giving his child a ten or a hundred thousand dollar check, or the groom a beautiful home to his bride.

If a wedding is an occasion of rejoicing, as it should be if the parties are well suited to each other for the life journey, surely our funerals should be occasions of quiet and respectful sorrow for our dead. The display of flowers has largely ceased, but not the idle curiosity that makes scores of persons eager to attend a funeral, and at the proper time "view the remains." Why hundreds who knew a person not at all intimately in life should be welcomed at the house of death to look upon a face worn by disease, and pallid in the not attractive hue of death, I cannot understand, save that custom un fortunately has made it a part of the funeral ceremony to look at the body. It seems to me that no one should see our precious dead except the half-dozen or more to whom they were especially dear; and at a funeral the coffin should be closed. "But," said a person to me, "you would have small attendance if people could not look at the corpse." Think of this curiosity being welcomed in the house of death! It is better that most of us be remembered, even by those who loved us, as we were in life. . . . Let us be laid to rest by the few who really love us, and not by the multitude who know us little and care for us little, but come to the house of mourning because it is the custom.—Sarah K. Bolton, in Independent.

THE GOSPEL OF NOISE.

It sometimes seems as if some people had embraced "the gospel of noise." They seem to have forgotten those scriptures which say: "The Lord is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before him." Hab. 2: 20. "Be still and know that I am God." Psa. 46: 10. "Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still." Psa. 4: 4. "Be silent, O all flesh before the Lord." Zeoh. 2: 13. "When thou goest to the house of God... be not rash with thy mouth to utter anything before God; . . . for a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool's voice is known by the multitude of words," Eccl. 5: 1-3. It is sometimes the case that from the beginning to the end of a religious service there is nothing but noise; not one moment for quiet meditation and careful thought. At first there is what is sometimes termed a "praise service," where for an half an hour or an hour people sing—sometimes without much regard to sense—noisy tunes with rattling choruses, the more noisy and the more rattling the better, until people are exhausted or wearied; then comes in a short sermon, or a few brief prayers or remarks, interspersed with more of the same kind of music, and so the hour passes by.

We recollect a special service where there were present a number of persons who were perhaps qualified to edify and instruct the people, but someone who supposed he had charge of the services, occupied nearly an hour at the beginning with preliminaries, mostly noisy and exciting singing, until at length he was interrupted by some one more experienced, who took the meeting in hand and tried to bring quiet, order, self-examination and devotion, out of the noise and confusion which prevailed.

We need in these days something besides the gospel of rattle-te-bang. There needs to be searching of hearts. The blessed man is one who medi tates day and night in the law of God. His life is not one whirl of noisy excitement. He has learned to wait on God. When he speaks he has something to say, and when the Spirit of God prompts him to bear testimony he proposes to have time to deliver the message which he has received. He is not anxious to see how much talking can be done in fifteen minutes, or how many people can jump up and sit down in half an hour. The question is not how much powder can be fired off, but how much execution can be done. The word of God, sharper than a two-edged sword, pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit; but the gospel of rattle-te-bang, the gospel of noise and clatter, the gospel of song which affects people's toes more than it does their hearts, and is better adapted to jigs and glees than prayers and supplications, is not likely to lead men to Christ, the Lamb of God, nor to melt and break the hearts of lost souls.

Can we not learn something from those who have lived before us? Is it not wise sometimes to wait in silence before the Lord, to ask him to show us his will, and then to listen while he answers us? Maybe in some hours of quiet and silent devotion the Lord will reveal to us truths which we shall never hear in the midst of noise and tumult and confusion.—The Armory.

"Redemption not only recovers from sin, but it abolishes death and overcomes the grave. All this Christ accomplished for us through his death and resurrection."
THE SOCIAL QUICKSAND.

"It sometimes happens on certain coasts of Brittany or Scotland that a man, traveller or fisherman, walking on the beach at low tide, far from the bank, suddenly notices that for several minutes he has been walking with some difficulty. The strand beneath his feet is like pitch; his soles stick to it; it is sand no longer—it is glue. The beach is perfectly dry; the bank, suddenly notices that for several minutes he has been walking with some difficulty. The sand is above his knees. He calls, he waves his hat or his handkerchief; the sand gains on him more and more. If the beach is deserted, if the land is too far off, if there is no help in sight, it is all over. He is condemned to that appalling burial, long, infinitely, immeasurable, impossible to slacken or to hasten, which endures for hours, which will not end, which seizes you erect, free, in full health, which draws you by the feet, at every effort that you attempt, at every shout that you utter, drags you a little deeper, sinking you slowly into the earth while you look upon the horizon, the trees, the green fields, the smoke of the villages on the plains, the sails of the ships upon the sea, the birds flying and singing, the sunshine and the sky.

The victim attempts to sit down, to lie down, to creep. Every movement he makes interferes. He straightens up, he sinks in; he feels that he is being swallowed up. He howls, implores, cries to the clouds, despair. Behold him waist-deep in the sand. The sand reaches his breast; he is now only a bust. He raises his arms, utters furious groans, and his nerves tremble strangely. Suddenly he wakes from his dream of security to find that last night he lost control of himself, and became the laughing-stock of the street. He makes resolutions of reform; he will give up his drinks. Then he finds that the dregs of the social glass form a quicksand that holds his feet with a terrible power. With agony he realizes the power of a quenchless thirst. He takes the pledge, entreats the aid of friends, resolves to amend; falls, resolves again, again he yields to temptation. Then if Faith, Hope, and Charity do not lead him to Christ, and "hope all things" for him, even against hope, and forgive all his failures, and deliver him from evil, he will die in despair.—From The Cup of Death.

PEOPLE WHO WERE RIGHT.

Joshua was right when he said, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Daniel was right when he said, "I will not defile myself with the king's meat."

David was right when he said, "I will bless the Lord at all times."

Elijah was right when he said, "If God be God, follow him."

Jacob was right when he said, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me."

John was right when he said, "Whosoever will may come."—Rum's Horn.

I didn't read the rest of it, for all at once there came the thought that if the ox and the ass knew so much, the horse old too, and maybe, he might find his way to his 'master's crib' if I let him alone. So I dropped the rein, and, sure enough, old Kelpie picked the way, and here we are.

Now, auntie, wasn't that a queer way to use that verse? I don't suppose that was what it was meant for when it was written—of course it wasn't—but then my having it in my pocket and it's falling out, and all that, didn't just happen.'"—Selected.

OUR LETTER BOX.

Dear Editor:—

I am a little girl eleven years old. I go to Sunday-school. My papa is superintendent and John A. Stump is my teacher. I went to the New Testament, watched, but our school closed the 15th of May. In Sunday-school we read out of the New Testament, you know; and what do you think it was? 'The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib—'

It really does seem as if I shouldn't wonder if that guideboard pointed a long way. —Selected.

No; it was providence—God's way to save you. Ah, Willie boy! that is one of the wonderful things about the Bible. Its words hold not only the general truth and teaching that are for all and for all times, but in hours of danger and trial some words unthought of before often come with a new peculiar meaning that makes them seem sent to us alone, bearing the very direction and comfort we need. Guideboards in the wilderness they surely are."

"I've been thinking about the last part of that verse, auntie," said Willie softly. "The ox and the ass know—but my people doth not consider." It really does seem as if I ought to know my Master and the way home as well as Kelpie. I shouldn't wonder if that guideboard pointed a long way."—Selected.

Atlantic, meeting only prosperous winds and fair weather. The children proved to be good sailors, and contrived to find daily enjoyment even amid the crowd of emigrants. These lowly fellow passengers showed them repeated kindnesses, and the captain, a rough but good-natured man, remembering the request of the pastor, marked them out as the objects of special favor.

Every night, before going to bed, Louise gathered the younger ones around her and read a few verses from the New Testament, in German, and then all six united in the words of the Lord's prayer.

Grown men and women were quiet and respectful as they listened to these babies at their devotions. Perhaps hard hearts were touched. It may be that prayerless lips were thus taught to pray. Do we not hear, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?"

At length the voyage was over. It had not been so very long, after all.

As they were approaching land one of the steerage passengers placed a small purse in the hands of Louise. It was a gift from himself and others, given out of their deep poverty. "Take it, my child," said he, "you have done us all good, by showing us how to be brave and to be true to what is right. We shall always remember you and your brothers and sisters with pleasure."

It is needless to say that this little Swiss girl and her family are now happy in the home of their adoption. They are the kind of children that are happy and useful everywhere.—Selected.

OPEN-AIR WORK.

A great many people would like to engage in open-air Gospel work if they only knew how, or rather if they felt they had the ability, and especially if they were sure of a large number of people to back them and to help in the meetings. It is easy to do anything when all the conditions are favorable, but in Christian work it will not do to wait for such conditions. Time is precious, souls are dying. If we cannot have what we would like and what would be certainly helpful, let us work for what we have. If we have not the privilege of working with a Gospel Wagon, Gospel Carriage or Gospel Pushecar, let us use what we have. If we have not the company of people to join us in the work, let us not wait, but start at once;—alone, it may be, to preach the Kingdom of God to a lost world, remembering that God can use anything, in the Bible line, no matter how simple. If a Christian is determined to engage in open-air Gospel service, a chair, a box to stand on, or even standing on a level with the audience, will not hinder the work from being done.

A great many people will plan to do outdoor work this season, but will plan only, for the work will not be done, as they will be waiting for a better outfit, or more help. A whole-hearted consecration is needed, and with this all obstacles will be overcome. There is a peculiar inspiration and uplift to this open-air work; it makes the worker rely upon God, and in the summer season it is certainly one of the great powers to reach the unsaved with the Gospel. Let us therefore not wait, but push forward, asking God for courage, and depending upon Him to honor and bless the Word.—Union Gospel News.

MILLER.—Died, in Dallas Centre, Iowa, March 21, 1893, Sarah Ellen, eldest daughter of Bro. Martin Miller, deceased, and sister Barbara Miller, aged 28 years, 6 months and 14 days. The subject of this notice was of a kind and amiable disposition and always had a great regard for religious people. Shortly before her death she was on a visit to Illinois and while there she publicly confessed Christ. About two weeks before her death she returned home having contracted quinsy in her throat from which she seemingly recovered, but on the afternoon of her death she took a violent chill and by five o'clock p.m. was a corpse. Her death was very unexpected to her and perhaps to herself. It was a great shock to her widowed mother who also was in feeble health. Burial in the Dunkard cemetery.
